TWO MEMBERS OF HORACE ACADEMY GIVE LECTURES

OBJECT OF SERIES OUTLINED

"Horace Through Ages"
Subject of Lecture
Being Delivered

"The Influence of Horace Upon the Middle Ages" by Edward A. Schaub and "The Influence of Horace Upon the Sixteenth Century of English Literature" by Charles E. Jackson, were the first offerings of the Horace Academy.

The lecture of Mr. Schaub, attended by a rather small group, dug back into the dusty ages and brought forward the manuscripts of Horace, written upon Papyrus strips, the crude medium of written thought of the early days, which were sacredly handed down from age to age, copied by the monks upon parchment and then safely guarded until the invention of the printing press.

Mr. Schaub then exposed the bearing that Horace had upon the poets of the middle ages, quoting specific instances where later writers had imitated almost verbatim the works of Horace.

Loyola Student Honored At Mission Unit Rally

Mr. Neil Cullen Decorated with Paladin Jewel at Cathedral Service

At the Students' Mission Crusade Rally, held at the Cathedral on Sunday, December 20, Neil F. Cullen, a member of the Freshman Class was awarded one of the Paladin Jewels in recognition of distinguished service to the Crusade.

Mr. Cullen is a graduate of Mt. St. Joseph's and while attending that school was a member of its Crusade Unit. He is at present a member of the newly formed Veterans' Unit, which is composed of former members of the Crusade who have finished their high school courses.

Father William McClimont, C. M., who was a Crusader before he became a priest and who has spent six and a half of his seven years in the priesthood as a missionary in China, preached the sermon at the rally telling of the hardships of missionary life.

The awards were made immediately after Benediction by Archbishop Curley to the fol-

SENIOR DEBATING SOCIETY MEETS

MONARCHY SHOULD RETURN

Church Too Closely Allied with Monarchy. Open Discussion Next

The restoration of the monarchy in Spain was discussed by the debaters of the Robert Bellarmine Society on Wednesday, January thirteenth. Mr. Robert L. Arthur, '34, defended the affirmative and Mr. Thomas M. Houff, '33, upheld the negative.

The affirmative started the discussion by acknowledging the need of a change of government in Spain. A reformation was needed not an overthrow. It is a trait of character of the Spaniards to get along better with a monarchy. He then took up the conditions in Spain since the overthrow of the Government.

Since the new party has taken the reins of government no one has been able to control the situation. Churches, convents and schools have been burned. Religions men and women have been driven from their homes and threatened with expulsion from the country. These things did not occur while the king

FR. LORD SPEAKS ABOUT CATHOLIC LEADERSHIP

"COMMUNISM A MENACE"

Father Daniel A. Lord, S. J., in an address to the Sodality members in the Library, Tuesday, January 12th, at 11:30 A. M., emphasized the necessity of Catholic youths taking their religious training seriously. He described the Sodality and its purpose and urged that every Catholic student should be a Catholic apologist.

Father Lord pointed out that in any great movement the important item is the training of the youths involved. He illustrated with Russian Communism.

He pictured the body of Lenin laid out in state. There is an unceasing din of music and marching. Five hundred thousand Soviet Russian youths come swinging by his body, saluting him and the red flag.

Secondly; a group of youths ranging from nine to twenty-one board an elevated train. They talk and their talk is of the Soviet. They read Communist books. They walk up through the aisle of the train singing Communist songs. They

Sociology Schedule

Six lectures on highly interesting and timely topics are planned by the newly formed Sociology Club. After spending the first semester in visiting and inspecting state and private institutions, the members, under the guidance of Father Ayd, S. J., professor of Sociology, recently published their program for the second term.

The Problem of Narcotics, will be discussed by Mr. Felix M. Graham; The Labor Problem, and the Papal Encyclical, Mr. Austin Nooney; the Death Penalty, Mr. Roland Farley; the Problem of Poverty, Mr. Thomas Kenny; the Problem of Crime, Mr. Jerome J. Egan. The program will be concluded by Mr. Frank Moran, who will discuss the problem of Mental Deficiency.

In conjunction with this series the inspection of State institutions will be continued.

HISTORY ACADEMY CONTINUES CIRCLE

CHIVALRY IS SUBJECT

War, Religion and Romance
Cited as the Notable
Features of Period

Continuing its circle of lectures, the John Gilmary Shea Academy of History, presented the third of its series on Wednesday, January 13th. The paper on "Chivalry, The Flower of Feudalism" was delivered by Mr. Julian G. Hanlon, '33.

Mr. Hanlon began by showing that the middle ages "stand out in bold type on the printed page of history", because of the institution of Chivalry. It was chivalry with all its features, whether good or bad, that gave to the period, the tone and color which we always associate with the middle ages.

"Chivalry was the moral and social law and custom of the noble class in Western Europe during the later Middle Ages, and the results of that law and custom, in action. It applies, strictly speaking, to gentlemen only. Its three principle factors were war, religion and love of ladies: its merits and faults spring from these three heads.

SENIOR CLASS TO HOLD CARD PARTY FOR ANNUAL

HORSES ARE FEATURE

One of the feature attractions of Card Party for the benefit of the Green and Grey and an innovation at card parties will be that section of the hall set apart especially for the "Horses". Playing at this pleasant past time has always proved to be quite popular at festivals and bazaars and is expected to be not less so at a card party.

Any friends of the College and the Senior Class who will not be able to be present on that evening and who would like to do something to make it a success, or even those who will attend and who would like to do a bit more are requested to give prizes or cake donations. These will be most gratefully received and appreciated. The Seniors will call for these gifts at the homes of the donors if they are notified.

As a convenience for those who do not have machines the Senior Class has arranged to have busses meet the No. 11 cars at Bedford Square and take the people to the door of

CHEMIST'S CLUB HEARS TALK OF NOTED SPEAKER

DR. SCHROEDER LECTURES

New York Commissioner
Treats Problem of Sanitation

Dr. William Schroeder, Jr., Sanitation Commissioner of New York City, lectured to the Loyola Chemists' Club on Tuesday, January 12th. "The Chemistry of Municipal Sanitation" was the subject of the talk. Dr. Schroeder is an eminent authority on this subject, and lectured on the subject in Europe during the past summer. Indirectly, the health of seven million people depends upon him.

"It is sanitation as much as anything else," the speaker said, "that governs the rise and fall of nations." Plagues, typhoid, and epidemics are indirectly traceable to some lack of care in this matter. It is also an improvement in sanitary methods that is responsible for the large jump in life expectancy in the last few decades. Once about thirty years, it is now forty-five to forty-eight—due in great part to the work of sanitation chemists.

To show what a broad field there is for the young chemist

Mendel Club Opens With Two Interesting Papers

Messrs. Millholland and Hanlon
Speak on Origin of Life and Protoplasm

The Mendel Club in order to make up for some lost time presented two lectures on January 13th.

The first was "Protoplasm" by Mr. Rollins Hanlon, followed directly by Mr. Arthur Millholland's discussion of the "Origin of Life".

Mr. Hanlon spoke of the history of protoplasm; how the "Protoplasm Doctrine" was first expounded by Max Schultze in 1861, and briefly sketched its history since that date. Each year brings new discoveries about the vital substance, and yet much remains to be explained. As a matter of fact, with each discovery, new mysteries unfold to the scientist, so that the deeper he delves, the greater the problems confronting him.

The chemical composition of protoplasm, inasmuch as we can understand it from the dead specimens which are studied, was one of the points discussed by the essayist. He also spoke

Catholic Leaders

In the recent address given by Fr. Lord before the student body of Loyola there were many interesting facts disclosed. The first, in order of sequence, was the tremendous strides that have been taken by the Communists for the organization of the children and youth of Soviet Russia—a tremendous army of atheistic propaganda, as the speaker put it. Secondly, and by far the more important fact to us was, that in this nation of 20,000,000 Catholics there is an alarming dearth of Catholic Leaders. Just what constitutes a "Catholic Leader"?

Clearly, it is not a mere fictional name—an elusive quality possessed by something non-existent. As the speaker said, it is that something, which when combined with the intellectual and moral training of a Catholic, serves to influence the field in which he is practicing. It is not enough that such a man should blindly profess his religion but that he should understand it and defend it against ignorant criticism. Such a type, it is then, that we are lacking. Medicine, law, surgery and politics have known Catholic Leaders at times, but the percentage was, and is, woefully small.

But one thing remains; the solution to this problem. And the solution lies in the Catholic Colleges and Catholic students of today. It is to them that the 20,000,000 are looking for guidance. It is to them that people are looking for the solution of present day evils and shortcomings. Present Catholic College men have the opportunity either of bringing the term "Catholic Leaders" to the fore or of relegating it to the background forever.

Politics

Another four years have rolled away and once again the "platforms" of the various parties are being dusted off and held in readiness for the "poll call." Even at this early date the hats that have been tossed into the ring form a huge pile. Already, the preparatory speeches of candidates and party bickerings are beginning to resemble the scraping and tuning of a mighty symphony—with, of course, the possible exception that the symphony will sound like harmony once it has started.

The battle, so far, has consisted only in several skirmishes between the "Full dinner pail" and "Jeffersonian principles" but soon, like the proverbial snowball, it will accumulate enough participants and issues to crash about our ears.

The solid South, the dry West and the wet East will nominate their favorite sons who look with anxious eye toward the White House. Cigars will again prove to be the medium of exchange and many a man will be offered the solace of one instead of a job and food. Prosperity, of course, will be still around the corner and woe betide the party that picks the wrong corner! The depression will fall under the promises of the various factions and the popular Prohibition arguments will be still rampant.

And what will come of it all? The promises of January become the issues of November and the issues of November often die before March. Thus the stage has been set and somewhere between now and next year the country will rejoice in the people's choice.

Evergreen Reflections

F. J. O.

On Premier Laval's return to Paris after his visit here, he was presented with an American ham by an admirer. He was undecided about who could prepare it for him in true American fashion. Accordingly we saw this headline:—

"HAM PROVES PROBLEM TO PARIS PREMIER."

Huh, lots of hams on the stage, screen, and radio are proving problems to the American people, but nothing is ever done about it.

Mnnich, the center on German beer production, holds the record for milk consumption in Germany. Baltimore is a commercial center for milk. Does it follow that we lead in beer consumption? This department regrets that figures are unavailable. Case dismissed—insufficient evidence.

A way out for young students who are afraid of "Leap year Mania" has been suggested by a case in Pittsburgh, Pa. A wife has deserted hubby because he was too bookish—because he preferred school. So, young men, take heed, and carry along three or four encyclopedias, a Greek dictionary and a text-book of Sanskrit to all your dates.

There is the rumor about the Loyola Freshman who had tea with an actress playing in the city. Whatta man!

The health of American people is terrible. As a race we must be sadly perishing from the earth. Minor ailments—such as colds, tummy-aches, headaches, etc.,—might lead to more serious things. Doctors' bills are rising steadily. People are always complaining. It is doubtful whether we can exist as a nation for longer than twenty years. From statistics published recently, everyone must be sick. Why the consumption of medical whisky rose 2,435,631 gallons in a single year!

Two Turkish debaters recently visiting the United States branded the American coed as 'only one-half of one per cent' feminine. Maybe that'll give us a chance to tell a few of them just what we think of them.

There is unemployment even in the ranks of college professors. And so of course, like the pampered individuals that they are, special steps have been taken to remedy the situation. There shall be survival of the fittest!!! (But how many fit?) There shall be special inducements, special appointments, special training, special everything. But whoever thinks of the poor college boy?

Popularity in a college is a funny thing. A few months ago the football hero was the center of attraction. The Senior class president also comes in for a bit of praise from the admiring Frosh now and then. Then of course there is the basketball captain. But who is it that holds the public eye from January till May? The Committee in charge of the Junior Prom tickets!!!!

Cardinal O'Connell denounces crooning as immoral, imbecile slush. The would-be crooner of the Class of '33 is safe—inasmuch as he does not fall into that category. But if he persists in his efforts, safety will be a thing of the past for him.

We have always held that both incongruity, and a feeling of superiority, form the basis of humor. A recent issue of a Joliet Illinois, college paper proves that. It carried an announcement of a student's illness. Directly beneath—as a "space-filler"—was this line: "Prizes are never awarded to coasters." Looking at this philosophically; if it was intentional, it is facetious. If it was not intentional, it is facetious. Philosophy is a great help.

Campus Clippings

G. I. W.

The melancholy days are here again—that little visit Spring paid to us only made things worse. Dreary days, nothing to look forward to except a call into the Dean's office, and a chance to display some forensic oratory. Semester holiday will be here soon. Chemistry students wondering how to drown a fish. Why not how to teach one to sit up and whistle the school song? Junior Prom practically on top of us. Usual secrecy about the orchestra and those "favors that will surpass the efforts of any previous class" press notices. At any rate, better start saving up the lunch money. Speaking of traditions, we are all in favor of starting a May day rolling on the slope in front of the Science building. Just lie down at the top of the hill, and start rolling. We think this would be the start of a swell tradition.

According to a noted clergyman, crooning is immoral. If so, a certain rotund Junior is in imminent danger of hell-fire. Let him be shrived quickly, and his promise not to do it any more will benefit both of us. Why do we pick on the Juniors so? Maybe it's just another tradition. Maybe it's because they are so outstanding? At any rate, there's loads of material there.

Of course, the Freshman are with us always, and recently one of them was in a quandary. (Yes, Egbert, something like a Hup.) Some clever Senior had sent him over to the Physic's Lab. to borrow a paper stretcher, and a rule to measure a broad grin.

From an old book in the library—Albany has four hundred dwelling houses, and two thousand four hundred inhabitants, all standing with their gable ends facing the street.

Professor Boop is in again with the remark that a hen never has a regular dinner, she always gets a pick-up meal. But it doesn't cost her anything as it all goes in the bill. We admit it—this is fowl.

NON-INTERESTING COLLEGIANS

Spencer Q. Sill, member of Phi Phi Fraternity, was the winner of the annual hoop rolling contest for three years' running. Of course, he had to run. Also won the prize for the best daisy chain. Mr. Sill has black curly hair, ten fingers and three store teeth. He writes verse like this

He kissed my fan, not me

Yestere'en

I did not think a man could be

So mean

My cheeks, my lips were red

Why not kiss them instead?

He's green.

A mere contemplation of all the wonders of science is enough to make one gasp. A psychologist at Colgate recently stated that digestive disorders are commonly caused by noises. It is a great relief to know that. Now after indigestion results from secretly munching a peanut bar in class, blame can be thrown only on the ungodly noise of the professor's chatter. When one of the boys makes an attempt to croon during lunch "let him have it". He makes you liable to serious digestive trouble. And even if he doesn't there are many other reasons for him to stop it.

No, of course not. Some women are deaf and dumb, and others are asleep.

Mr. Quinn has also been City Editor of the Shreveport Times, Louisiana; Managing Editor of The Catholic Home, of Oklahoma City; Editor of The Little Flower Magazine and is author of The Apostle of Love.

Father Ferdinand H. Schoberg, S. J., '17, Assistant Retreat Master at Manresa, was the celebrant of the semi-annual Communion Mass of the Lawyers Manresa Club of Washington, which was held in the Chapel of Gonzaga College.

Father Schoberg, together with Father Eugene McDonnell, S. J., ex '85, Retreat Master at Manresa, conducted a meeting of about thirty captains of the Manresa Retreatants on Tuesday, January 5 to organize plans to get one thousand former retreatants to attend the Communion Mass which will be held at the Cathedral at 8 o'clock on Sunday, January 31. More than fifty retreatants from among the College Alumni are expected to attend. The Mass will be celebrated by Archbishop Curley and afterwards breakfast will be held at the Southern Hotel.

Father Schoberg also spoke at the smoker which followed the Holy Name elections at St. Athanasius Church at which he gave an interesting talk on the retreat movement.

Mr. Herbert R. O'Connor, '17, State's Attorney, was one of the speakers at the Holy Name Smoker which was held at the Blessed Sacrament Church Hall on Thursday, January 21. Mr. Isaac S. George, '01, introduced the speakers.

Mr. O'Connor will be one of the speakers before the Community Institute of Human Relations which will be held from February 14 to March 13 at the First Christian Church. Mr. O'Connor will speak on "Church and Crime Prevention".

Harry J. Froehlich, brother of the Rev. Robert J. Froehlich, ex '02, was elected President of the Immaculate Conception Holy Name Society for the fourth time.

At a meeting of the St. Gregory's branch of the Holy Name Society on Sunday, December 6, Father Charles F. Morrissey, ex '14, the spiritual director, was presented with a Christmas Purse.

At the annual election of Holy Name officers held at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Mr. Thomas Coyle, '29, was elected a delegate.

Msgr. Harry A. Quinn, ex '14, Rector of the Cathedral, addressed the Holy Name men of St. John the Baptist at their annual Communion Breakfast at the Southern Hotel on Sunday, January 10.

Msgr. Quinn also conducted the Benediction exercises for the Cathedral School Alumni in the school chapel on Sunday, January 17. This is the second of a series of talks and Benedictions to be given by Msgr. Quinn to this alumni group during the course of the year.

The Rev. Gregory Kiehne, S. J., '03, pastor of St. Michael's

Church, Ridge, Maryland, who has been an ardent promoter of interest in the Knights of Columbus in his parish, sent a delegation of twenty-five new members to the conferring of degrees at La Plata, Md.

Mr. Leo A. Codd, '96, was one of a number of men who helped the Rev. H. Roach, assistant pastor of St. Matthew's Church, Washington, to make the Holy Name Solemn Vesper Service a success. Two thousand members attended.

Father Richard A. O'Brien, ex 1900, is rector at the Ateneo de Manila in the Philippines. His brother, Frederick O'Brien, the author of "White Shadows in the South Seas", died on January 9, in San Francisco.

Wilfred T. McQuaid, '27, who lives at 5142 Park Heights Avenue, has been appointed to fill the place of James M. Hoffa, who will assist in the preparation of alcohol conspiracy cases. Mr. McQuaid received his LL. B. degree from the University of Maryland in 1931 and was graduated with honors.

Mr. Angelo Pente, '30, is studying at the Maryland Dental School.

Mr. John T. Remington, '30, was married to Miss Nancy Grogan on Tuesday, January 12. The couple will be at home after the first of February at 609 E. Forty-first Street.

Greyhounds Again Best The Old Liners

LOYOLA UPSETS MD. UNIV. IN CLOSE GAME TO ACHIEVE "THE IMPOSSIBLE"

REVAMPED GREYHOUNDS CLICK
Squad with Five Freshmen
Ineligible Outplays
South Champs

For the second successive year Loyola's quint journeyed down to College Park facing an "impossible task," and for the second successive time it performed the impossible. The Greyhounds entered a basketball game with the University of Maryland, considered the underdogs according to every sports writer in this city and Washington, but emerged on the long end of a 28-27 score.

At the start, the fracas looked as though it would develop into a scoreless tie, neither team being able to break into the scoring column for nearly four minutes. Curtis got the first jump and the Greyhounds gained possession of the ball but missed two shots. The Old Liners took a rebound and attempted three long shots but to no avail.

After missing two chances from the foul strip, Maryland broke the ice on the third. This was the only time in the first half that the Terps were to lead, until about a minute before the whistle. Bender tied the score on a foul shot and two quick goals gave the Greyhounds a 5-1 lead.

Due to extremely close guarding, the scoring ceased for a few moments until Maryland executed a fine play for a double-decker. A foul goal by the Greyhounds and an outside shot by the Old Liners left the former with a single point lead.

Maryland became a bit rattled and the Baltimoreans slipped through two baskets to jump the score to 10-5, the largest lead enjoyed by the visitors all night. But the lead did not last long. Four fouls and a field goal gave Maryland a one point lead. Each club tallied once more and the half ended with the hosts leading 13-12.

Coming into the second half, Maryland was destined to lead until the final minutes. The Terps led off with a foul shot and Loyola followed suit. Two successive goals raised the difference in points to five.

Loyola tallied and then the game was slowed up by a succession of fouls, each team making good three shots. The Greyhounds tallied again to come within striking distance but the University was determined to hold the lead, and spurted. Two swishers gave them a 25-20 lead with but five minutes to play.

Bender received the next tap and passed to Carlin for two points and Curtis followed suit. Nooney who had entered the game when Rehkopf was ejected on fouls, swished the longest shot of the contest from the middle of the floor for a one point lead.

Loyola became a bit too anxious to hold the lead and a Maryland man was fouled in attempting to shoot. Given two free throws, he made both good to regain the lead. Carlin took the tap and tossed to Bender. With the precious seconds swiftly sliding by, the Green and Grey quint vainly tried to work the ball inside.

After four attempts, Bender shot a pass to Carlin who dribbled and let the ball fly. It slapped the backboard perfectly and dropped through the netting. Loyola froze for the remaining minute and left the floor victors.

The entire team played a good brand of basketball, but most credit is due Ken Curtis. Bender was brainy. Carlin played with spirit and dash. Rehkopf broke into the scoring column and played a good defensive game. Nowak guarded well and kept down the Terp score. Nooney made a good showing for his first college game. And last but far from least, Ken Curtis was in form. The main reason for the Terp defeat was that they could use no tip-off plays since Ken got nearly every tap.

The game itself was a direct contrast to the 1931 match. Maryland changed its style of attack and slowed things up considerably. Coupled with this, the referees put a governor on the game by calling 27 fouls. Of these, 13 were on Loyola and 14 on Maryland. However, Maryland was granted 20 free throws while the Greyhounds were allowed but 16.

KEN CURTIS

It was under Bill Scheurholz, the coach who for many years guided Loyola's basketball destiny, that Ken Curtis began to unfold his court career. The first year saw him on the bench, but the following year he advanced to join the first team.

In 1927 he jumped center for the team that brought the State Championship to Loyola High. Then he was selected to captain the team in his final year. It was as a member of the championship club that Ken flashed his topmost form. He was an excellent tip-off man, an unexcelled rebound artist, and an adept floor man.

After finishing his course at Loyola High, Curtis decided to matriculate at Loyola College. Already Liston and Twardowicz, members of the same team on which Curtis performed in high school, had gained positions on the varsity.

But Curtis had first to overcome a difficulty; Rodgers was the obstacle impeding his advancement to a regular position. And so, for the first part of the basketball season in his Freshman year, Curtis was an understudy to Rodgers.

But he was not long to remain a substitute. Before the season had reached the half-way mark he was alternating at center with Rodgers. Sometimes, too, Rodgers would be shifted to guard to make way for both players. And, as a matter of fact, before the season was completed, the regular lineup had Curtis as a center fixture while Rodgers was stationed permanently at guard.

Having the necessary experience, Curtis rose to great heights in his Junior year—the year in which Loyola captured the state championship—the year in which it won a splendid victory over Maryland, which team subsequently showed its prowess by annexing the Southern Conference Championship.

The success of the team that year was owing in no small part to Curtis for time after time he managed to get the tip-off from his opponent and thus insured Loyola of the possession of the ball for a good portion of the game.

Loyola Beats C. U., Bows to Mt. St. Mary's and St. John's (N. Y.)

In three hard games Loyola emerged with two defeats and one victory. Loyola was defeated by St. John's, Brooklyn, and Mt. St. Mary's, and won a close game from Catholic University.

St. John's journeyed to Loyola with a record of ten victories and one defeat—and that one administered by the City College of New York, one of the best college teams in the East.

Even though Loyola did not show top form that night it can not be doubted that the visitors' pass work and shooting was better than Loyola's best. The visitors, lead by their center, piled up a lead that was never approached. St. John's counted on foul shots, shots from beyond the center of the floor, from the sides and, in general, from every part of the floor. The jumping of Curtis and the guarding by Bender stood out as bright points for Loyola. The final score—Loyola, 30; St. John's, 41.

Within three days Loyola played two more opponents, away. The first game was with Catholic University and this time "working on all five" the Greyhounds pulled away with a 35-33 victory. The game was fought evenly throughout but close guarding did not prevent the taking of long shots. Tanneyhill, Carlin, Bender and Curtis starred for Loyola. Victory was insured only in the last few moments of play. Both Catholic University and St. John's play Loyola again: the former at Loyola and the latter at New York.

After tucking away a victory over C. U., Loyola traveled to Emmitsburg to gain further ground in the State race, but met a tartar in the Mt. St. Mary's quint. Nemesis again dogged the Greyhounds' footsteps and a tight 26-23 game was registered in the lost column. Close guarding kept the score low and Loyola's long shooting looked ragged. The score see-sawed back and forth and the Greyhounds' efforts to climb into the lead were halted by the final whistle.

As in high school, Curtis was again elected captain in his senior year. Up to this time he has shown that he well deserved the honor, proving himself an able and an efficient leader.

QUINT DISPLAYS TEAMWORK

Rough Game Ends in 39-16
Score—40 Fouls Called on Both Teams

The Greyhounds stayed in the thick of the State championship fight by more than doubling the score against the Terrors from Westminster. Although 55 points were scored, the game was slow from a spectators point of view.

Tanneyhill broke the ice a few seconds after the first tap with a field goal, and the Methodists followed suit. Curtis was fouled on the next tap and made good his shot. Rehkoph and Curtis dropped successive two-pointers.

Two fouls and a field goal for each side brought the score to 10-7, and Western Maryland was finished for the half. Meanwhile, Tanneyhill, Rehkoph, Bender and Carlin worked on the hoop to bring the Green and Grey total to 19.

During the first half the Greyhounds took eleven shots from the foul strip, completing seven, and 26 from the floor, making six. The Terrors were able to sink only one out of three foul shots, and three out of twenty field goals.

The Upstate boys scored first in the second period but Curtis took a rebound a moment later and evened things up. Three fouls by the visitors, and a field goal and a foul by Bender and Rehkoph kept things still even. But the Terrors could not hold up.

Bender swished two fouls and Carlin a field goal before a foul gave the visitors another point. Rehkoph clicked two points, Carlin and Curtis followed with fouls and then Vinny added two more to hoist the score to 34-13.

Beltz entered the game for Ed Rehkoph and did himself proud. In the few minutes that remained he hooked two field goals and a foul for a total of 5 points. Final score: Loyola, 39; Western Maryland, 16.

In the final period the Greyhounds brought their total to 13 fouls in 21 attempts and 13 field goals in 58 tries. The Methodists clicked 7 out of 19 fouls and 5 out of 41 field goals.

The victory gave Loyola an average of .667 in the State race, having lost only to Hopkins. With six state games left to play, the Greyhounds have a fine chance of annexing the Maryland title with eight games won and one lost.

Rehkoph, after going scoreless for the first two games, seems to have found his eye and should be a great help.

(Continued from Page 1, Column 5) in municipal work, the speaker enumerated the duties of the chemists in the various city departments. There is the Health Department, with its food analysis, water analysis, study of toxins and antitoxins, and inoculation to prevent start of epidemics. There is the water department with its need for chemists — besides other bureaus such as that of Standards.

The real problem, however, is that on the hands of the sanitation department. New York City goes one hundred fifty miles into the Adirondacks for its pure water. The expense and care involved in bringing it to the city would be useless unless other health measures were taken as well—unless sewage was kept from bathing places, for example.

Despite the importance and magnitude of the sewage disposal problem—a million and a half gallons daily must be taken care of in New York—it is only in recent years that attention has been paid to sanitation.

There are various ways in which disposal can be accomplished scientifically. It can be done by screening—but the method is impractical. Then there is filtration with sand, charcoal, or coke. But with such a huge volume this method is also impractical. Fermentation, precipitation, and settlement all offer possibilities.

The main difficulty with all, is the amount of space required. There is now a plant being built in New York, which will be able to handle some 180,000,000 gallons. This takes care of only one-fifth of the population,—and yet requires a fifty-two acre site. It is evident that not many of these can be built in the vicinity of a city where space is at a premium.

One of the biggest fields for the commercial chemist of the future is the disposal of rubbish. New York is now thinking about incinerating plants to work on principles of destructive distillation.

The blame for this second problem of waste disposal is laid primarily on the American housewife by Dr. Schroeder. American women throw away seventy-five per cent of their table, he says. In New York alone 29,000,000 cubic yards of waste was disposed of last year—more than that of all Europe.

On the other hand, the foreign housewife is thrifty and has no appreciable waste. Berlin, with a population almost one-half that of New York, has but three incinerators, of one hundred twenty-five ton capacity each. New York has twenty-one incinerators, and fourteen in some stage of construction. If the cities were able to keep all the rubbish disposed from being a decided loss, the problem would be solved. As it is, they incinerate it, and carry the residue to sea. Many useful products—which could be produced by chemical methods,—are thus lost.

(Continued from Page 1, Column 5) of the physical properties of the elusive basis of life, stressing the uncertainty of all our conclusions regarding the mysterious substance. After tracing the course of numerous scientific experiments on protoplasmic properties, he closed with another reminder that "the knowledge of our ignorance is the best thing which we can possess."

In treating the "Origin of Life", Mr. Milholland spoke principally of the falsity of the theory of spontaneous generation. Beginning with the experiments of Redi in the early sixteenth century, he showed how this early scientist has disproved the so-called "spontaneous generation" of maggots in dead animals. With the discovery of microscopic life, a new controversy arose, which was not definitely settled until the middle of the nineteenth century. By a series of accurate experiments, John Tyndall conclusively proved that the theory of spontaneous generation was absolutely untenable.

The next problem facing municipalities is that of snow removal. There is at present no way of removing this menace to business except by manual labor. New York spent almost three million dollars last year to clean up the business district after three small snowstorms. If it were possible to spray some chemical on the streets, to melt the snow without too great a cost, the problem would be solved. Hence another field of effort for the young chemist.

Finally, a subject intimately connected with recent discussion in Baltimore, was mentioned in the lecture. This is the smoke nuisance. The chief cause of it is to be found in oil burners that have recently gained in popularity. The only way to overcome the nuisance, according to the lecturer, is to educate janitors, manufacturers, and house owners, to the fact that with proper regulation of burners they will get maximum combustion, they get better heat with less smoke and a lower consumption of oil.

At this meeting of the Chemists' Club, Father R. B. Schmitt, Faculty Director, announced that the Club's program of lectures for this year had been published in the Journal of Chemical Education.

CITY MARKS ONE HUNDREDTH AND TWENTY THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH OF EDGAR ALLEN POE

January, 1932, marks the 123rd Anniversary of the birth of Edgar Allen Poe. Only two American poets, Poe and Walt Whitman, have received universal acclaim from European litterateurs as exerting a real effect on literature. France opens her arms to both of these. Beaudelaire championed Poe and hailed him as a genius before an incredulous world.

Poe, the more versatile of these two writers, spent the most important part of his life, from an artistic viewpoint, in Baltimore. Here he first found recognition and later, after the misfortunes that marked his life and attended his death, a final resting place.

Poe and Whitman had poverty in common. In all else they differed. Whitman rejoiced to be alive, fraternized with Indian, pioneer and roustabout, cared little about wealth, peered into the wonders of nature and tarried through 80-odd years of life.

Poe, used to an atmosphere of wealth and culture, was crushed by poverty. In his desires as in his writings he lived in a world of luxury, tasteful appointments and lovely melancholy ladies. Subjected to the point of madness, he was not strong enough to cope with life, coming to a wretched death at half Whitman's age. The Saturday Visitor, a Baltimore journal, offered a prize of one hundred dollars for the best original tale submitted. John H. B. Latrobe, later six times mayor of Baltimore, a man of excellent literary taste and a writer of very pleasant prose, was one of the three judges.

Assembled at the house of Mr. Latrobe the judges ran through the manuscripts and even though they were mellowed "by excellent mind and good cigars" could find nothing to praise. Finally they observed a small quarto volume which had escaped notice. It contained a series of tales by Edgar Allen Poe, a man unknown by the judges except Mr. Latrobe. The critics were charmed with their find and finally selected "A M. S. found in A Bottle" as a prize winner. In the same group was the now famous "Descent into the Maelstrom." Thus in Baltimore Poe found his first literary encouragement.

Fayette and Greene is a busy corner. Street cars going by—an endless noisy stream of traffic floats through Greene Street until it is choked by another proceeding through Fayette Street. The daylight hours see youngsters flocking from the school that bears Poe's name, to its annex across the street.

At night the street is filled by a more sombre, serious group, working boys and girls, a little tired and drawn, fill the benches lately emptied of the day scholars. The One Hundred and Fourth Regiment Armory rears its head above Fayette Street. From its windows issues the acclaim which greets the victory or defeat of the lesser gods of the boxing world.

Also at Greene and Fayette Streets is the Westminster Churchyard. Here beneath a marble monument lies Edgar Allen Poe. On his right is his wife, Virginia, who shared the most threadbare and pathetic years of his life. On his left his mother-in-law, Rhea Clem.

The Genius lies with an illustrious company, for the Westminster Churchyard is the Westminster Abby of Baltimore. Here are many of the men who made the name of Maryland famous in American history, David Poe, grandfather of the poet and American patriot. Here are five early mayors of Baltimore: James McHenry, Secretary of War under Washington, Commodore David Porter, who went to sea at twelve and later shamed Europe by driving the Barbary pirates from the sea, and Robert Purviance, patriot and banker, famous for his aid to a destitute Continental army. With this goodly company are Gen. Robert Smith, Secretary of Navy under Jefferson and later Attorney General of the United States; General Samuel Smith, defender of Baltimore, six times mayor of Baltimore, member of Congress for forty years and Secretary of the Navy, and in addition many of the merchant princes of the days when clipper ships took Maryland tobacco to Europe and brought coffee from Brazil,—men who built Baltimore into a great and gracious city.

France has offered more than mere individual tribute to Poe's genius. On his tomb in Westminster Churchyard is a graceful palm spray inscribed "A la memoire de Edgar Allen Poe. Eternellement dans les coeurs de ses amis français. "Presented by the French Consul."

Despite all the discussions over the problem of collegiate athletics, the new Yale gymnasium cost $5,000,000.

Intramural athletics seem to be taking on an air of importance in many colleges. For instance, at Grinnell College, recently, the winner of a Tiddly Winks contest was awarded a beautiful ivory set of Tiddly Winks.

The Sophomores at Loyola University, New Orleans, were recently given a run for their money by the Freshmen, under a barrage of eggs, bricks, and other odds and ends. As a result business in many tailoring shops took a decided turn for the better.

At Creighton University, Omaha, not so long ago, a group of "Big Shot" Coeds challenged any group of males, who had the courage to accept the challenge, to a rifle match. Things certainly look bad for the future of Chicago and the combatants in the next war.

"The Collegian," of St. John's College informs us that one-fifth of a large crowd at a dance held there recently, had "Muscle In". It is no wonder St. John's is to have a Boxing team this year.

Speaking before the tenth annual meeting of the International Student Service held at Mt. Holyoke College, Dr. Walter M. Kotschnig of Austria said he believed that Colleges were responsible for the present unemployment situation by their failure to cope with vital economic problems.

From the "Gonzaga Bulletin" we read that at a recent survey held at Reed College, Portland, Ore., it was found that the affairs of comic strip characters are held as more important to the average student than the affairs of the nation, state, or city.

FATHER LORD SPEAKS ABOUT CATHOLIC LEADERSHIP

cheer: "Long live the Soviet!" and "Up with the red flag!"

In these two pictures Father Lord pointed out that the Communists had the right idea. They started by rousing the enthusiasm of youths. He illustrated further use of this idea by the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism. This association, in organizing, paid particular attention to its collegiate divisions and by so doing soon had such influential names as "Sons of Satan", "Legion of the Condemned Souls," etc. Even with the underlying principal undeniably wrong, the idea of pulling on youth for recruits was the swinning stroke.

Father Lord granted that beautiful buildings and wonderful faculties are assets. But, he assured his hearers, they are not enough to make students in Catholic colleges the Catholic leaders they should become. The stuff must be in the man himself. Each individual student should throw his heart and soul into the study of his religion and prepare himself to be an influential Catholic.

Father Lord showed how important it is for the present day youths to prepare themselves to become leaders by giving his audience a glimpse of present conditions. He pointed out that there are about twenty million Catholics in the United States and that their influence is bewilderingly slight. One looks into politics and finds practically no Catholics. One looks into diplomacy and finds the percentage of Catholics to be one-half of one per cent. Where are the twenty million Catholics?

There are undoubtedly many magnificent Catholic laymen to be found, said Father Lord, but they keep in the background. We need leaders.

Here Father Lord told his audience that it was up to them to do their part by learning their religion while they are in school. He mentioned that although it is known that a great many people attend college because it is easier than working, and a great many others because of the depression, Catholic students should attend because they wish to obtain the knowledge of their religion so necessary to be able to answer questions about it and to refute arguments against it.

Entirely too many Catholic students, according to Father Lord, leave school apathetic. They don't have any religious feeling or interest. He pointed out to his audience that this condition is ridiculous, considering that their religion is the only one that has an answer for every question. Let's have interest in the thing for which Catholic colleges were established, he urged.

Father Lord reviewed the evolution of the Sodality. The Sodality, he said, was established in the days of the Reformation. Its purpose was to train leaders. Members of the Sodality said, "The first thing I must do is be exceptional. I must know my faith and I must practice it. Then I must be apostolic; I must share it with others, write it, talk it, spread it."

Then the Jesuit colleges formed a union of these enthusiastic boosters of religion. Now there is a chain of groups. The Sodality exists in twenty leading cities of the United States.

At this point Father Lord pointed out that the Sodality is the laboratory of the religion class. He urged his audience to unite in a great movement to train themselves to be Catholic leaders so that in years to come there won't be the perplexing

"Horace Through Ages" Subject

(Continued from Page 1, Column 1) standing authority on Latin literature, who confronted Mr. Schaub with the most baffling difficulties, asserted that the fact that Horace was so little imitated in the writings of the Middle Ages proved that his works were of no worth. But Mr. Schaub answered this difficulty by saying the reason for Horace's unpopularity during these times was that during the Middle Ages there was a prevalence of Christianity in literature and thus the pagan principles of Horace had no place.

Mr. Jackson whose lecture necessitated a vast amount of original research work because of the absolute lack of any work dealing directly with his subject, delivered his discussion on the night of January the fourteenth. In his lecture, after giving a detailed outline of the political history of England, during the sixteenth century, he continued with a general sketch of the literary history of the country at that time and concluded with an exposition of the writers in whose works traces of Horatian influence can be found.

The lecturer cited instances in the writings of numerous of authors, where the precepts of Horace can clearly be discerned. He also spoke of how during this century the works of Horace were used as a text book in the schools.

The next lecture of this series will be given by Mr. Joseph Bradley on February the third.

question, "Where are the Catholic leaders?"

Catholic young men, he made clear, should realize their responsibility. They should prepare for war, for it is inevitable. Not a war with gas and gun powder, but the war of decency against indecency; morality against immorality; order against chaos; in short, the battle of those who love Christ against those who hate Him.

Senior Debators Meet To Discuss "Monarchy"

(Continued from Page 1, Column 2) reigned. Religious persons and religious buildings of all creeds were safe in Catholic Spain. Hence a reformation should have taken place, not an overthrow of the government. France and Germany were used as an example and their present day government was compared to the rule of the monarchs.

Then he advocated the return of Alphonso, although not to have a free hand but to be at the head of the government. A king at the head of a country lends dignity to that country.

For the negative Mr. Houff showed that such a move, the restoration of the monarchy in Spain, would demand the withdrawal of the powerful Radical Republican faction from its present position of supremacy in the government. It would mean the putting aside of the national constitution now in the formation, beside a national bond that has incited the people to a spirit of cooperation and confidence. From such an auspicious position, most favorable to Spain in every way in her present unsettled condition, this faction would be forced into an attitude of open hostility and opposition which would be practically the direct antithesis of its present political activity.

The negative's next strong point was the fact that the Church was too closely allied with the monarchy and hence he explained this accounted for the open opposition to the Church, after the monarchy fell.

No vote was taken on the question or on the merits of the speakers. At the next meeting an open forum discussion will be held.

History Academy Continues Circle

(Continued from Page 1, Column 4) the Chivalry was at its height, it appears that comparatively little attention was paid to literature, at least by the Knights. Their great interest was in the songs of the troubadours, who sang of love and war. At every banquet or marriage feast, the master of the house would have numerous minstrels to entertain his guests and this seemed to constitute all that was literary of the period."

The lecturer pointed out that, although many of the songs were of literary value, in general it seems that the knights were entirely too busy with military endeavors to bother about wielding a pen. As Cornish said, "The patronage of literature passed from the hands of the men into those of the women. Men were interested in wars and, when not warring, in drunkenness."

Then coming to the point which everyone connects with knighthood and chivalry, Mr. Hanlon said, "It cannot be doubted that the coming of chivalry raised the position of womanhood. It became absolutely necessary for every squire and knight to have some fair lady for inspiration, and the loves and glories of fair ladies became the chief topic of the literature of the day. It is true that womanhood became symbolic for the highest virtues but the most eminent authorities, seem agreed that the opposite was true in many cases."

Before he finished his lecture Mr. Hanlon remarked that the knights to please their ladies, threw money to the people; indeed an indifferent lady often caused an ambitious knight to empty his pocketbook.

The subject of the next lecture will be "The Mediaeval Castle."

TYPICAL CASTLES OF FEUDAL REGIME SUBJECT OF TALK

MR. THOMAS DUGGAN SPEAKS

Famous Towers of London And Dover Described In History Lecture

Members of the John Gilmary Shea Academy of History were treated to an interesting lecture on "The Mediaeval Castle", by Mr. Thomas V. Duggan, '33.

Mr. Duggan outlined the various stages in the development of castles, from the ninth century until the height of the feudalistic period in the thirteenth century. He then described a few typical castles, such as that of Dover, and the famous Tower of London.

"The castle was usually built upon a promontory formed by the junction of two rivers. There were two reasons for so doing; first, in time of war this made the castle accessible from only one side, on land, and second, in time of peace it made communication and trade much easier."

"The early castle consisted of a large, rough tower, surrounded by a palisade of heavy timbers, and reinforced on the landward side by a ditch. Within these walls were huts for refugees, store houses for a limited quantity of supplies and rude stalls for cattle. It was not until the end of the twelfth century that castles were improved and in many cases reconstructed. This was due to new ideas of attack and defense which the returning crusaders had gleaned from observation of the Saracen strongholds."

"The tradition of a strong British or Celtic fortress having been maintained for centuries." (Continued on Page 4, Column 4)

Smith", was the subject of the first debate of the second semester by the George Jenkins Debating Society on Wednesday, January 20. The Affirmative side was upheld by Robert Peddicord and John Simms while Patrick Phelan and James Shea defended the Negative.

The arguments of the affirmative were that Roosevelt had a superior cultural background, that his views on questions of the day were clear and decisive. They also stated that (Continued on Page 3, Column 1)

RADICAL CHANGES IN BIOLOGY DEPT.

SECOND-YEAR MEN AFFECTED

Entire Year To Be Devoted To Extensive Study Of Anatomy

It was recently announced by Father Frisch, Professor of Biology, that the second year of Biology, formerly consisting of a semester's work in Comparative Anatomy and one devoted to a course in Embryology; has been changed, so that the second year course will be concentrated on the subject of Comparative Anatomy.

For those students who intend to enter Medical school or pursue Dental studies next year, and wish to do some work in Embryology, this branch will be given at the Saturday classes.

Before the department of Biology was raised to the status of importance it now holds, the second year work consisted of half-year courses in Mammalian Anatomy and Embryology.

Under the new plan a third year in this department will be added starting next year. This new course will comprise a semester devoted to Embryology and a half year's work in Histology. Later other courses, as Bacteriology, etc., will be added to the curriculum to give more scope to those (Continued on Page 3, Column 4)

Decorations For Prom Are Already Planned

MOTIF TO BE MODERNISTIC

Although there are nearly three months intervening between the present date and that of the Junior Prom, already the great bulk of preliminary work has been finished.

The most outstanding thing accomplished is the decision upon the scheme of decoration. Mr. Storck, chairman of that committee, announces a distinct change from any previous Promenade setting. The motif this year will be modernistic—a trend in designing which no former class has followed. Moreover, there will be no glare of lights from the ceiling, a complete system of indirect illumination being arranged.

The Favor committee, also, has decided upon its selection after having inspected numerous articles from many different firms. They say it will be a great surprise and something entirely original but apart from this they remain the traditionally cryptic and mysterious group. (Continued on Page 4, Column 3)

PHILOMATH FORMS CATH. ACTION UNIT

EX-PHILOSOPHICAL CLUB

Plans First Laid At Retreat Given By Fr. C. Herzog, Future Moderator

The Philomath which was organized at Loyola about fifteen years ago, is about to be reorganized by the Loyola Alumni in the form of a Catholic Action Club. At a meeting held at the home of Mr. George Renahan on Tuesday, February 4, tentative plans were laid down for this new society. Its purpose will be to study and discuss practical apologetics and to engage in lay apostolate work.

At the beginning at least, the members of the classes of 1918-20 will probably form a nucleus which will be added to when the society passes the experimental stage.

Fine Attendance Makes Freshman Hop Success

On Friday, January 29, the Freshmen held one of the best dances ever given by a Frosh class.

To say that the hop was a success is putting it mildly. Approximately 220 couples were present and there is every reason to believe that a good time was had by all. Not even Old Man Weather could dim the success or dampen the spirit of the occasion.

The neat, yet striking decoration transformed the gym into a real ballroom and the fine music of T. Worth Murphy inspired many a foot. Compliments were heard on all sides for programs, music, decorations—everything.

SPEAKS AT CHAPEL ASSEMBLY

Large Body Of Students Attend First Friday Mass And Communion

Mass and Holy Communion and, a stirring talk on vocations by Monsignor Quinn, '14, marked the devotions to the Sacred Heart on the first Friday of February.

The Mass began at 8:25 A. M. and was attended by a surprisingly large number of students. Those who attended received Holy Communion. Later, at 10:30 A. M., in the Chapel, there was an assembly of all the students, at which Monsignor Harry A. Quinn spoke.

In a quiet voice and with captivating earnestness Monsignor Quinn explained the necessity of having a definite aim in life.

"It is pitiful", he said, "for a man to finish college and still not know what he will do in life. It may be a difficult problem to solve, but it can, nevertheless, be made less difficult by using the proper means." The proper means, according to Monsignor Quinn, are prayer for enlightenment and a sincere effort on the part of the subject to decide upon the vocation best suited to him.

He emphasized the importance of the effort, "for", he (Continued on Page 3, Column 2)

DEBATERS DISCUSS THESIS SYSTEM AS METHOD OF EXAMS

MEETING ON FEBRUARY 9

Purpose, Advantages, And Disadvantages Of Topic, Scored

Whether the thesis system is preferable to the present system of final examinations, was the question argued by the Robert Bellarmine debating society in an open forum discussion held Tuesday, February ninth.

The thesis system demands that papers showing "a scholarly understanding of the subject and a considerable amount of specific knowledge of the topic discussed" be handed in by the students.

"The purpose of the system is to emphasize critical reading and thoughtful writing, which will take the place of emphasizing the answering specific questions which may often be an unfair method of testing intellectual ability."

The chief argument advanced against the final examination was that "the time which is usually spent by the student in cramming several weeks before an examination now can be spent in the leisurely preparation of the paper."

Where final examinations are employed they are given "too much importance and a passing mark does not necessarily mean the student has mastered the subject and a failure that he has an unsatisfactory knowledge of the course".

For the conscientious student the thesis system seems to be preferable. For besides putting his regular time on his (Continued on Page 3, Column 3)

Mite Boxes

Lent, the season when most Catholics take thought on the lack of any real penance in their lives, and make some appropriate resolution, is again at hand. Many will resolve on some penitential exercise, some mild work that is rather an acknowledgment of the need of penance than a genuine work of penance. An example in point is the bibulous army officer who resolved during Lent "to take his whiskey without a chaser".

A real penance is one involving some sacrifice. President Wilson's war-time prescription "give till it hurts" describes it well. To make a donation to a cause, be it ever so worthy, is not necessarily a penance. To many the "widow's mite", involving hardship on the part of the giver, would be a penance. To others many times the same sum would entail no personal sacrifice, and would therefore be no penance. How much would mean a sacrifice to you?

Foreign missions are always begging. Sometimes it is churches, sometimes schools, sometimes clothing and food for the poor. Always something. Yes, and sometimes they get what they are asking. But when depression at home is clutching those who normally enable the missions to keep going, what is to be done? These are terrible times for the missions to which the "Mite Box" donations are to be sent. Two alumni and many former teachers at Loyola are among those needing help.

War

The war clouds have again risen on the horizon. This time China and Japan furnish the hostilities while a wondering world sits by and examines the barrier of peace pacts, treaties, conferences and disarmament programs through which dissension has burst its way. The illusion of security and protection laid down by the World Court has faded in the light of reality, and protests lodged with the Japanese government prove futile. In the popular language of the day, "so what?"

A doctrine drafted many years ago seems to point the way for America: "keep out of foreign entanglements". A relic of the past, yes, but seemingly written for the occasion.

War seldom seems to rise from any but sordid motives. An altruistic shibboleth is adopted to arouse the enthusiasm of the men,—and then, presently, victorious allies are squabbling acrimoniously over the spoils. Once before it happened that benevolent nations kept Japan from "dismembering" China and then charitably declared a protectorate over the same parts of China Japan would have taken as war indemnity.

We must preserve national self-respect: no one denies that. But outside that—George Washington's sage advice still holds. Hands off.

FRANK MORAN

In accord with an established custom the beginning of the new semester saw the retirement of the erstwhile editor of the GREYHOUND, to take up exclusively the work of editing THE GREEN AND GREY, the senior year book.

To the editorship of the year book, so important to all the members of senior class, since it is the repository of so many treasured memories, it is proper that the ripe fruits of painfully gained experience should be brought. It cannot but be regretted, however, that Mr. Francis R. Moran, the Editor Emeritus of THE GREYHOUND, who has been responsible for so many improvements in the paper for which he labored devotedly must pass on to other fields.

Coming from Loyola High School Mr. Moran had no previous experience in newspaper work, but showed such aptitude for the work that soon after joining the staff he was appointed associate editor and in due time succeeded Mr. Phil Smith in the chief editorship.

That the paper improved under his guidance is generally admitted. Indeed a flattering review recently printed in a friendly contemporary in the Middle West, while complimentary to all members of the staff, is largely a personal tribute to Frank on his managership. He was a good boss.

February

February is the month of the two Americans who claim a page in world history, George Washington and Abraham Lincoln.

It was Washington who welded together into a compact union the squabbling colonies of America and made of them the nation. Without the aid of coercion, graft and political log-rolling he established laws and enforced them; set up Justice and saw that its eyes were not blinded nor its scales uneven; appointed men that fit the office and not offices that fit the men. In short, a just, intelligent, far-sighted individual who wore well in the office of Presidency.

The other was Abraham Lincoln, surnamed "Honest Abe" and "The Railsplitter". He did not lay the foundation of the country, though, perhaps, that task would not have been beyond his capabilities. It was his thankless job to hold together a nation torn by civil strife; to raise a country helplessly struggling on the ground, and to restore, before Death claimed him, a more glorious and powerful nation than had before existed!

The aims of each were achieved and America glorifies these men. So the editorial ends on the same note with which it started—"George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, two of the World's Great."

Progress in a college is almost inevitable, some would say. At any rate, it is evident everywhere. New systems are installed; new ideas are carried out; there is constant improvement in facilities, etc. All branches advance steadily. Why, here at Loyola, 20 years ago a Freshman caught walking on the grass at any time during September, October, November, and December, was spanked by the Vigilance Committee. Now he is spanked by the Vigilance Committee.

I see there have been quite a number of new "top-pieces" acquired around here in the last few weeks. Recent statistics tell that a number of rather well-known hat manufacturers have been scouring the dumps of the country, reclaiming old hats, fixing them up as gaily as ever and selling them as 1932 models. Pleasant thought. The Hon. Editor has a new lid.

With modern plumbing to let water run by
Alone in our love nest, just you and I
When we're in the gutter.

We'll banish our worries, and climbing the stair
We'll live in our gutter with never a care
When we're in the gutter.

AVAILABILITY OF SMITH VS. ROOSEVELT DEBATED

FUTURE FROSH DEBATES

The negative, in defending Mr. Smith declared that as he was a man who had risen from the ranks he would have the interests of the people more at heart. They said that Governor Roosevelt, contrary to making a firm stand on Prohibition, had straddled the issue. Whereas, Mr. Smith is clearly known to favor the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, would at least be sure of every wet vote and hence would be more likely to be elected.

A vote by members of the Society adjudged the negative side the winner.

The Affirmative side of the second debate, "Resolved: That the U. S. Government should grant licenses for public sweepstakes as a means of securing aid for hospitals", held on Wednesday, February 3, was upheld by Messrs. May and Costello against Messrs. Eastman and Fusting.

The affirmative stated that the present support of our hospitals was very meager and that a sweepstakes would supply a means of revenue so difficult to obtain at present.

The negative declared that sweepstakes would not benefit the hospitals to any great degree after the expenses and taxes had been taken from the total amount collected. They also said that this means would lead to private speculation and would cause contributions and bequests to cease. They then showed that only four hospitals had benefited from the Irish sweepstakes held last year. No vote was taken on this debate.

Other subjects for the coming year are, "Resolved: That in the execution of criminals in the state of Maryland electrocution should be substituted for hanging"; "Resolved: That the Federal government should assist states in suppressing gangster crimes"; "Resolved: That intramural athletics supplant extramural athletics in our colleges". The speakers appointed for the last few debates are Messrs. Hans, Cochrane, Lee, Lewis, Flynn, Melin and Polek. Several open forum discussions are listed.

It is not yet certain whether there will be any debates with outside teams. Last year and the year before the Freshmen Society met Fordham.

The questions selected for this semester are most timely and interesting. The Roosevelt-Smith debate may prove to be a forecast of future events: the "National sweepstakes" argument is a debatable question inasmuch as cries are going up all over the country to the effect that hospitals and medical institutions are receiving very little help from the government and are sustained largely by private contributions. The question of change or abolition of the death penalty has always been a most important point in Maryland and this fact alone should serve to stimulate interest in the "electrocution vs. hanging" debate. The recent furore over Professionalism in athletics gives the last debate of the year an added tinge of interest.

Vocations Treated

(Continued from Page 1, Column 4) said, "we cannot expect to have our vocation revealed to us directly as in the case of St. Paul. That is not God's way. We must do all we can for ourselves; use all available, natural methods along with our prayers."

With specific instances he illustrated how unhappy people become if they fail to decide upon something to do throughout their lives which is suitable to them. The only real happiness, he showed, follows from love of one's occupation.

DEBATORS DISCUSS THESIS SYSTEM

MEETING ON FEBRUARY 9

But the student who just takes things easy during the year certainly must study at the time of examinations if he entertains any hope of receiving a passing mark. Yet since all kinds of students make up a class, both systems have their advantages and their disadvantages.

However the trend of modern education seems to be toward the liberalization of education and while the thesis system may have its defects, it may clear up many of the defects of the final examination system.

MR. KENNY HEADS WORK ON HISTORY OF SODALITY

PAMPHLET RACK TO BE SET UP

The first step towards having the history of the Sodality at Loyola compiled was taken at the last meeting of the Sodality. It was agreed that the work will be started as soon as the right men have been chosen for it.

Mr. Kenny is interviewing the individuals who are willing to take part in this work and grouping them according to the degree of aptness of each. He will present the names of a group of men of his choice for consideration at the next meeting.

Another advance made by the Sodality at this meeting was the planning for a pamphlet rack. The reason for it is to make literature on all religious questions available at a nominal price. The rack will be put in some convenient place and will be kept up to date with the latest and best pamphlets for sale.

FEDERAL HILL

This is the third of a series of articles on the monuments of the Monumental City.—Ed.

Walking along Pratt Street and glancing southward over the Basin one notices a grassy pyramid rising over the surrounding buildings. Continuing along Pratt Street to Light and along Light to the Key Highway, the foot of Federal Hill is reached.

A climb up the three long tiers of steps is well worth the effort, for the Hill looks over the black funnels of the steamers to the green countryside beyond.

At night Federal Hill has added charm. From a bench on the crown of the Hill, the harbor basin is an inky pool splashed with light. The growing Baltimore skyline rears a proud head above you, an occasional excursion steamer glides by—with faint clashes of music and lights that seem like clinging fireflies.

There is a monument of Colonel Armistead on the north walk which Laetitia Stockett describes as "utterly hideous". And it is utterly hideous with its ungainly marble shaft and four elegant cannons—yet its very drabness is more soothing and restful and more in keeping with Federal Hill than would be a more graceful piece.

Half a dozen times during the Summer a Municipal band plays here. The usually empty square is filled with a noisy troop of youngsters who become oddly silent when the music begins. The band usually plays a Friml melody, Gilbert and Sullivan selections, several current fox-trots and the inevitable Sousa marches.

A critic might find the music far from praiseworthy either in selection or rendition, but as Leacock has humorously written, "there are times when there is nothing so pleasant as 'bad' music."

Be that as it may, that music is a pleasant thing when you are leaning back on one of those benches with a pipe between your lips, looking over the lighted city.

Federal Hill has a history that is both interesting and important to Baltimoreans.

In 1788 Baltimore was sharply divided between Federalist and Anti-Federalist sympathies on the question of consolidating the United States under a Constitution. Local feeling ran so high that public officials feared rioting.

Then the report spread through the city that the Constitution had been ratified. Federalists and Anti-Federalists united in their rejoicing. A parade filed through the city dragging a float containing a complete miniature schooner. Falling out at Philpott's Hill the marchers found a barbecue awaiting them, and the evening was spent in speech making and public rejoicing. From then on the spot was known as Federal

Hill and the tiny schooner—christened "Federalist"—was presented to President Washington, who received it with delight.

After the War of 1812 Federal Hill came into prominence again. When General Lafayette paid his long awaited visit to America no city received him more enthusiastically than Baltimore. As the vessel bearing the marquis and his two sons glided up the harbor a salute of 24 guns roared from Federal Hill.

April, 1861, saw Baltimore again torn between two factions—a great number of the citizens was staunchly loyal to the Union while an even greater number thought Maryland should secede from the Union.

On April 18th, after several weeks of unrest, a group of Confederate sympathizers floated the Stars and Bars over Federal Hill and prepared to fire a salute of 100 guns in honor of Virginia's secession from the Union. After several guns had exploded the police broke up the meeting, tearing down the flag and destroying the guns.

Just after this event General Butler came into Baltimore with the Boston Light Artillery and the 80th New York Regiment. Having heard of the uncertain temper of the city and after losing several men through attacks by local Southern sympathizers the general chose Federal Hill as a strategic location for a camp. The Union army busied itself with fortifying the Hill while General Butler was disturbed by reports of an attack planned by a band of hoodlums known by the ornamental title of Knights of the Golden Circle.

Union sympathizers, too, were in their glory. In their homes was a great stir of boiling, roasting and cooking—jam cupboards and wine cellars despoiled as they prepared to make a feast for the soldiers. General Butler thwarted their hospitality however—ordering the soldiers to eat only army rations, fearing poison from Southern sympathizers.

Scarf, the historian of this period, says that the Hill was the scene of many pleasant gatherings of officers and the young ladies of Monument Street and their families.

With the close of the Civil War the military camp at Federal Hill passed away.

In 1878 the city fathers decided to purchase the land from its owners because of its "historical significance and remarkable view". Workmen tore down the fortifications, planted trees, built the walks and stone walls.

Federal Hill has remained practically unchanged since then and will continue to be a pleasant retreat until it is seen that it interferes with the harbor development or some like project, and then another old landmark will vanish.

From Here and There J. P. B.

According to a survey made by the professors at New York University, College girls do less hand-shaking for high marks than do the men students.

Speaking before the Liberal Club of Johns Hopkins, Mr. Bernard Ades, a prominent attorney, said that "lynching" both the mob and the legal varieties are the methods used by the state apparatus to terrorize the Negro workers into quietly accepting conditions that are worse than Chattel Slavery."

A Senior business student at Villanova College has worked out a plan which he claims will be a boom to wage earners. He has a new system of fire insurance, the insurance being against being fired by the boss.

A survey among athletes at the University of Maryland, who are lettermen in two or more sports revealed that lacrosse was the most popular game there. Basketball and baseball were even for second honors.

The second great "Battle of the Century" will be held shortly when the staff members of "The Fordham Ram" engage the stage crew in a bridge tournament.

Decorations For Prom Are Already Planned

The one item, however, and one of the most important, still in the process of consideration, is the orchestra. Mr. Otcenasek, chairman of the music committee, is working diligently to obtain one of the popular and nationally known jazz ensembles of the day and believes he will be ready to make final arrangements within a few weeks.

As soon as the selection of the orchestra is made, invitations will be issued and patrons solicited by those in charge of the business end of the Prom. Anyone desiring an invitation to be sent to his friends is requested to give their names to Mr. Hanlon of the Junior class. He expects to send out approximately one thousand invitations.

BOOK REVIEWS

G. I. W.

(Editor's Note: The following is a review of the literary Semi-Annual collection of Essays and Poetry published by the poetry class of Ateneo de Manila, Manila, Philippine Islands. Under the name of "Wings" it presents a collection of some 60 essays and poems.)

"Wings", an Anthological work compiled by the Arts Class of Ateneo, is unique in many respects. The happy title, well fulfills the editorial hopes, and the fledging made a remarkably high flight. Having once experienced the thrill of the upper reaches we are expectant of greater sustained flights by our Philippine confreres.

The essays on the old masters of Greek and Roman literature are studious and well worked over compositions, showing a deep appreciation and love of the best in literature. There are others, equally as well done, on some of the more modern poets. The boundary spurning soul of Shelley is there, and the beautiful "Adonais" Byron.

As for the poetry we feel like the backwoodsman when he first saw an aeroplane, "I don't believe it." Here indeed, is a worthwhile effort, but no, effort suggests labor and these poems have an ease and facility of expression remarkable for a Freshman Class.

Freshmen are supposed to write verse, but here we find poetry. There is also some light verse interposed to balance the more serious works. "In the Talkies", by Leon Guerrero, Jr., is satirically Horatian. The same author in his "Carabao" has chosen an ordinary commonplace scene and

(Continued from Page 1, Column 1) ing occupied the high cliff of Dover has long persisted, and is justified by still existing traces." With this sweeping remark the essayist introduced a long discussion of the castles which are supposed to have stood on this site. He enumerated and described in some detail three distinct fortresses, the Roman camp in very ancient times, the Saxon work of which traces remain, and the Norman keep which survives till this day.

The Tower of London was the last point discussed by the lecturer. In reality it is a combination of many towers, all of which, as was pointed out by Mr. Duggan, have a very romantic history. The meeting closed on a rather melancholy note, with a few remarks upon the graveyard which lies at the foot of Tower Hill. "In truth", writes Macauley, "there is no sadder spot on the earth than that little cemetery. Death is there associated...with whatever is darkest in human nature and in human destiny, with the savage triumph of implacable enemies, with the inconstancy, the ingratitude, the cowardice of friends, with all the miseries of fallen greatness and blighted fame."

turned it into a picture delightfully reminiscent of Chestertons, "The Donkey".

Among the essays, "The Voice of Cicero", "Solitude", "Homer's Battles", "Shelley and the West Wind" and "God's Mother" are especially commended both for their thought content and their skilful and delicate treatment. It is immediately evident that much thought and time has been lavished on the writing of these essays and the finished product thoroughly justifies this measure.

The poetry may be divided into two classes as regards the style and length. There are many little passages of four lines that closely resemble a quatrain of Fr. Tabb. Under this classification might be mentioned, "Dirge", "Dawn" and "To A Rose" and there are several other poems of from four to fifteen lines that come in for considerable praise.

"Time and Death", "Money" and "Sunset" are very well done and the last, especially, contains some very beautiful descriptive passages. One of the best of the poems is, Homer's Passion Garden. Thought and description are beautifully blended in a combination that is the ultimate aim of poets. But to return to a general viewpoint, it is only possible to say that "Wings" is a book of poetry that should make its authors proud, and one that has certainly given pleasure and enjoyment to its reviewers. To the Staff of "Wings" we say congratulations and best wishes for your future endeavors.

(Continued from Page 1, Column 5) satirists of their times, Mr. Bradley cited passages of their works and then quoted in scholarly fashion the Latin lines from which the passages were derived.

At the conclusion of the lecture, Mr. Arthur, who acted as chairman, invited the audience not only to present difficulties to be answered by the speaker but even to attempt to "sink him". To this challenge there were many responses, although none succeeded in outwitting Mr. Bradley. By answering all questions he showed that his knowledge of the subject was very extensive.

Mr. Bradley in answer to difficulties directed at him, asserted that of all the classicists of the eighteenth century, Addison was most influenced by Horace and that Pope was more indebted to Horace than to Juvenal, altho' he also imitated the latter to some extent.

The audience, which was the largest yet to be present at one of these lectures, included members of the faculty, alumni and members of the College classic circles.

The Rev. Francis J. Flanagan, ex '00, pastor of the Church of the Ascension, Halthorpe, Md., in his sermons at the Masses on Sunday, January 31, protested against the use of electric lights instead of blessed candles around the coffins of deceased Catholics. Fr. Flanagan said, "The beeswax is symbolic of the 'Flesh of Christ'. It seems to me then that Catholics would want candles at the head and foot of the coffin of a deceased member of the family".

Fr. Flanagan was one of the many priests who assisted at the Mass of Requiem which was offered at Dahlgren Chapel, Georgetown, for the repose of the soul of Father G. L. Coyle, S. J., who was for many years prominent in the affairs of the American Chemical Society.

'05

The Rev. John I. Barrett, '05, Archdiocesan Superintendent of Education, in his annual report to Archbishop Curley, announced that there are now 179 schools in the Archdiocese and that there are 57,690 pupils in the elementary, commercial and secondary schools. During the past ten years there has been an increase of 20,000 in the elementary schools.

'14

Mr. August J. Bourbon, '14, was one of three Holy Name Crusaders who spoke at the Holy Name meeting held in Corpus Christi Hall on January 14. These speakers gave an outline of the history of the Holy Name Society, the establishment of the Archdiocesan Union and the various activities going on in the different parishes.

'15
The Very Rev. John J. Lardner, S. S., '15, president of St. Patrick's Seminary, Menlo Park, California, and former vice-president of St. Mary's Seminary of this city, preached the sermon at the celebration of the patronal feast of St. Francis de Sales Church, Oakland, Calif. His Excellency, the Most Rev. Edward J. Hanna, Archbishop of San Francisco pontificated at the Mass.

'16

Joseph J. Quinn, '16, Editor of the "Southwest Courier" of Oklahoma, was present at the Catholic Press Association Convention in New York City.

'17

The Rev. Joseph V. Buckley, ex '17, pastor of St. Francis Xavier's Church, Washington, gave a one-day closed retreat at the Washington Retreat House for the ladies of the St. Francis Xavier and Holy Name Parishes.

Father Buckley will also deliver short sermons at the Lenten noonday Masses at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Washington, during the week of February 15, and will conduct the Three Hours' Agony at that church on Good Friday.

Mr. Herbert R. O'Connor, '17, State's Attorney of Baltimore and president of the State's Attorneys' Association of Maryland, advised the prosecutors of Maryland counties that finger prints and other data pertaining to criminals which are in the collection of the Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice, hereafter will be available to all State's Attorneys of Maryland counties. Instructions for taking finger prints were also included in Mr. O'Connor's letters.

'21

Mr. Harry Casey, '21, delivered an interesting lecture on Papal Supremacy at the Catholic Evidence Guild, 803 North Calvert Street, of which the Rev. John Russell, D. D., is Moderator.

'26

A recent fire in the J. J. Lacey Iron Co., 1401 Block Street, of which James J. Lacey, ex '26, is President, did several thousand dollars' worth of damage.

'27

Mr. Bernard McDermott, '27, recently passed his examination for admittance to the Bar. He received his degree last year from the University of Maryland.

'29

Mr. Leo Talley, ex '29, who is president of a Washington insurance company, married Miss Emma Lou Shealy at All Saints' Church. Father Hann, the assistant pastor, performed the ceremony. Mr. Talley was given a bachelor dinner by the members. (Continued on Page 8, Column 1)

Plan For Fr. Ooghe Memorial Discussed At Exec. Alumni Meeting

Executive Committee Reviews Plans For Alumni Mass And New Directory

A memorial to Father Justin J. Ooghe, S. J., was one of the subjects of interest and importance discussed at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Alumni Association, held on Thursday, February 4. Those present were: Father Love, Faculty Representative; Mr. Mark O. Shriver, '02, President; Mr. William Sehlhorst, '17, First Vice-President; Mr. John Conway, '27, Second Vice-President; Mr. Goddard Mattingly, ex '01; Mr. Albert Sehlstedt, '19; Mr. John Boyd, '96; Mr. Edgar Graham, '16; Mr. Frank Horgan, '25; Mr. Robert Bouchelle, '30; and Mr. George Renehan, '18.

One of the first matters discussed was the Constitution of the Association which was revised and tentatively approved at the last general meeting on October 13. It is now subject to the approval of the President, the Executive Committee, the Faculty Representative and Father Wiesel. It was decided to submit it to a committee composed of Mr. Shriver and Mr. Renehan for certain changes before final adoption.

It was decided to hold the Alumni Communion Mass on Low Sunday, April 3, in the College Chapel. Mr. Sehlstedt, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee was given authority to contract for the breakfast which will be served after the Mass. Father Love was asked to supply a speaker for the occasion.

The next matter discussed was the compilation of a new Alumni Directory to replace the one issued in 1925 which is now out of date and inaccurate. Mr. Renehan and Mr. Bouchelle were appointed by the President to formulate plans for this publication. Mr. Horgan and Mr. Conway were appointed to investigate the cost of publication and ways and means for securing the necessary funds.

The question of a memorial to Father Ooghe was next brought up and Mr. Mattingly was appointed to ascertain the cost, type and location, etc., of such a memorial.

In conclusion, ways and means for collecting dues from members of the Alumni were discussed. It was made known that all money from dues received are expended directly on the Association for items such as entertainment, breakfasts, printing, etc. Only a small percentage have paid their dues so far this year. Out of 600 bills sent out only 40 were returned and a request was made that members be more prompt in the future and thus help the Association cut down time and extra expense by repeated mailings to members.

The Chapel Windows

R. E. L.

Lieut. Joseph Hanlon

Most present Loyola students have, at one time or another, seen and wondered at the story behind the names of the deceased Alumni who are commemorated on the windows of the Students' Chapel. Perhaps they have noticed that the six memorial windows on the right side of the Chapel bear the names of former Loyola Students who died as members of the Society of Jesus, and that the ones on the left are in memory of those loyal sons of Loyola who made the supreme sacrifice in the World War. It is with this latter group that the present series of articles will deal.

Behind every one of those names is a history—a history of self-sacrifice and devotion to duty in which the principles of courage and manliness which these men learned during their years at Loyola played no little part. And so, to the memory of these loyal sons this series of articles is dedicated, that the story of their noble deeds may not become obscured by the passage of time but live on as an inspiring tradition to all Loyola men.

Lieut. Joseph T. Hanlon, '12

Lieutenant Hanlon was born in Baltimore on March 3, 1893. He entered Loyola High School in 1904, continued on to the College and ended a brilliant career at Loyola in 1912. During his entire course he distinguished himself as a student of great scholastic ability and received the "General Excellence Medal" in his Sophomore year at College.

From Loyola he went to Columbia University, N. Y., where he took up the study of mechanical engineering and was graduated with highest honors in 1916. During his years there he won the esteem of both his teachers and associates. After his graduation he received a position as mechanical engineer with the Ingersoll-Rand Company of New York. Some time later became engaged to Miss Dorcas Carleton, of St. Louis, Missouri.

When the United States entered the Great War Mr. Hanlon enlisted and was appointed a second lieutenant in the 30th Engineers of the Chemical Warfare Service. He sailed for France on December 26, 1917, spending the evening before his departure with a former school companion, Mr. Paul Brown, S. J., '11. In recognition for work done for the French Government, Lieutenant Hanlon was awarded the Croix de Guerre with gold star on June 18 by General Passayu of the VIII Army.

In two letters written to Father Fleming, then Dean of Studies at Loyola, he said, "These are the days behind the big push. It is impossible for us to operate, but we are able to do road repairing in the advanced area and so the Company is busy at that. In a way I'm glad because we are on the scene of action, and are aiding greatly in getting the needed stuff to the boys who are really doing the trick. Father, the Yanks are sure 'there' and every day I become prouder of being one of them." "There is a philosophy of war. It means in essence; 'Beat the enemy; protect your own!' he does not play the game squarely but we are going to beat him."

Six days after these letters were written, Lieutenant Hanlon was killed in action at Chateau-Thierry on the Soissons-Rheims front. He died as he had lived, bravely, unselfishly, while looking out for the safety of his men. On the night of July 30-31 he was in charge of a party of men carrying ammunition forward to the front lines for a Stokes-Mortar operation. The men were stretched out in a long single file when the enemy began dropping shells close to the rear of the line where Lieutenant Hanlon's party was. Two of his men were hit and as he ran to give them aid, another shell exploded, mortally wounding him. He did not live to reach the dressing station.

Lieutenant Hanlon was the first officer in the Chemical Warfare Service to be killed in action. He was buried in the American Officers' Cemetery at Chaumont, with full military honors, and a gas experimental field in the vicinity was named "Hanlon Field" in his honor, and a granite stone to his memory was set up at the entrance.

LOYOLA VANQUISHES GEORGETOWN 31-30 IN THE SEASON'S MOST SPIRITED BATTLE

Hilltoppers Throw Scare
Into Opponents
By Rally

Fresh from a well-earned triumph over Mt. St. Marys in the previous week, Loyola next entertained and defeated Georgetown, a team with an unfortunate record showing seven defeats, no one of which was suffered by more than two points.

Despite this number of games in the lost column, the Hilltop aggregation still carried before it the reputation of being a first-class outfit, one which had lost to St. Johns of Brooklyn by but one point and that coming from a field goal looped in the last minute.

In view of this latter fact and the fact that Vince Carlin was confined to bed and Ed. Rehkopf was on the sidelines with a wrenched knee, Loyola took the floor the underdog.

At the outset Bender sank a field goal from beyond the foul circle and Beltz, soon after, swished the cords for two foul throws to enable Loyola to jump into a early lead. Carolin of the Hoyas counter balanced this, however, with an outburst of two long field goals. From that point on the lead was not sufficiently large for either team to take it easy. The visitors doubled their score, then Loyola again scored. About three minutes before the close of the first period, the Hilltoppers held a two-point margin over Loyola. At this juncture Bender pierced the cords twice from long range and Lunak followed up with a short one to give Loyola a 16-12 lead as the half ended.

Up to this time neither team had been showing much in passing or floorwork. Both teams were relying on the marksmanship of their distance shooters. Bender, of Loyola, became ever more of a threat as time after time he looped a basket from mid-field.

The Blue and Gray outfit proceeded to tie the score as soon as the final period had commenced. Two successive field goals by two different players knotted the count. This was the spark which set Loyola afire, for from that point on the Evergreeners were never headed. Indeed, until the last five minutes the lead steadily increased. While Georgetown was able to add but three more points Loyola amassed thirteen. The Green and Gray quint scored seven foul shots and three goals during this spree. Bender alone was accountable for all the field goals.

This apparently comfortable advantage of ten points only served to make Loyola breathe too easily. The Greyhounds became more careless and Georgetown began to creep up. Slowly they narrowed the gap between them, and with each point, the confidence of Loyola was jarred. A minute remained to be played with the score 31-

28. A half minute passed and King of Georgetown slipped in a field goal. The players became frenzied with excitement at the tipoff. Loyola got possession of the ball, but Georgetown forced the jump, the ball was sent rolling on the floor by the jumpers, and before it was recovered by either side the whistle blew.

MITTMEN REPORT FOR FIRST BOXING WORKOUT

NEW SPORT AT LOYOLA

A startling announcement was made by Coach Comerford at the General Assembly just prior to the Christmas recess to the effect that boxing was to be instituted at Loyola this year. Just one meet is scheduled for the current season but this marks the beginning of a sport which was never before attempted at Evergreen.

Practice is being held almost daily by the boxers in preparation for the meet booked for February 22 with the Western Maryland mittmen. Tom Farrel who has had much experience in the ring, is acting as coach.

Some thirteen men have responded to the call for candidates. These scrappers range widely in weight from the heavyweight class down to the 120-pound class. The complete list of those who are working out:

Cullen, 200 pounds
Farrel, 185 pounds

"CHIEF" BENDER

"Chief" Bender's athletic career began at Calvert Hall and embraced all the sports that could be engaged in by one man. He was a halfback on the football team for three years, and gained immortal fame for himself at the Hall by beating Loyola High School one year with a brilliant eighty-yard run. Each spring for four years he played a sparkling game at shortstop on the baseball team. One season he went out for track and garnered enough points in scholastic meets to win a letter in this new sport.

CAGE GAME FAVORITE

The Chief has always been at his best in basketball, playing four years at regular guard at Calvert Hall. His natural ability plus Dutch Lentz's coaching resulted in a seasoned, polished court player while he was still in high school. During the four years that Bender played, Calvert Hall won four Catholic and three State Championships. He won a place on the All-Maryland interscholastic teams in his third and fourth years of high school. Additional honor was accorded him in his Senior year when he was elected to captain the court squad.

EXCELLENT STUDENT

Somehow he managed to find ample time for his studies, and set the pace in scholastic as well as extra-curricular activities. He is one of those rare combinations of good athlete and outstanding student. It is a good thing when a man can specialize and excel in one undertaking, but the real test of ability is to excel in a number of fields of endeavor. Many a boy is "a Jack of all trades and Master of none," but Chief is a master of all.

STILL STARRING

Here at Loyola Bender's activities have been curtailed and he has been asked to forego football lest an injury should lessen his worth to the basketball team. In his Freshman year Willie saw a good deal of action on the court, and became accustomed to college basketball. Last year he was an important cog in the combination of Liston, Carlin, Curtis, Twardowicz and Bender, one of the

With Mt. St. Mary's striving to maintain her first-place position in the title race and Loyola facing a loss of prestige by further defeat, it was evident from the start that such natural and evenly-matched rivals would expect no quarter and would give none. The first half, while furnishing plenty of action, with both teams setting an unusually fast pace, and ending with Loyola holding a slim two-point margin, ended at 18-16. Nevertheless it was not to be compared with the second half for incessant thrills. During this period as neither team was able to forge ahead to any appreciable lead, the anxiety of the players and spectators alike, increased with the waning moments. Desperation seized the players and physical contact became common until the game threatened to get out of the one referee's control.

The pace continued fast and furious until the final moment, when, with the Mounts one point ahead, the blocking of Curtis' frantic attempt at a long shot drew a double foul. Here Curtis lost the game by missing his first shot and saved it by caging the next, a second before the gun.

In the extra-period no let-up in action was apparent, as the Chief broke the tie with a foul, J. Lynch put the Mountaineers ahead for the last time with a field goal, while Lunak arrived from the bench in time to count on a hurried long shot, which completed the scoring for the night and left Loyola in the lead at 32-31.

BREATH-TAKING TILT

A nip and tuck game with Catholic U., played in conjunction with the W. Md.-Hopkins game, attracted approximately 1,800 fans, the largest home crowd of the current campaign. Again Ed. Rehkopf was held on the sidelines due to his recent injury, but Carlin saw action after his respite of a few days, being injected into the lineup shortly before the close of the first half. Despite his efforts, the Washingtonians eked out a 37-34 victory.

Loyola reversed the order of play in the previous game, and mooched along slowly at the start. Falling out of a tie at a field goal apiece, the Evergreen basketekers slumped to let Catholic U. roll up the score for five minutes before they again scored. Nor was the all around play of the visitors that much superior. Rather it was the success which they had with the long range fire.

From that point on, the Green and Gray quint would rally to within a point of their rivals only to have them reciprocate and pull away to an advantage of a few baskets. Finally when the score stood 15-7 in favor of the District team, Carlin was called into the fray. Incidentally, he had not fully recuperated from his sickness and had not practiced for a week.

Upon his entry into the game, Carlin within a few minutes had counted three goals amidst a storm of applause before the opponents had registered any more points. Here the visitors added three more points to increase their lead to four points. Carlin scored his seventh point

Curtis' invaluable performance at center was notable, as were Carlin's scoring and fast-breaking sorties, while Bender's improved attack and dependable defense joined with the consistent play of Tanneyhill and Lunak, completed the efforts of a fighting team that was not to be denied.

Loyola's annual trip to Chestertown again proved disastrous, the game being lost 32-22. The Chesapeake jinx remaining enthroned as far as the Greyhounds are concerned. But the contest was not without its anxious moments for the Shoremen, as Loyola displayed some of its customary fight, twice drawing up close, as the running scores of 19-17 and 22-21 readily testify. Lunak and Tanneyhill counted heaviest for Loyola, but an aroused Washington club proved invincible.

Shortly after play was renewed, the Washingtonians increased their lead to seven points. Loyola fought back and reduced the margin, but Catholic University was persistent and was never tied thereafter. Several times the game was apparently decided as the visitors established leads sometimes amounting to nine points. Each time, however, the advantage was chopped down sufficiently to put the Evergreen basketballers again in the running.

Toward the close of the contest, Taneyhill sank a field goal and a rally was started to hack away an eight-point advantage. Before three minutes had elapsed Catholic U. lead by but three points. At this point, a visiting player dribbled the length to register a goal. This was offset by a Loyola basket a minute later but for the few minutes left, the Green and Gray obtained possession of the ball but seldom and then only to fumble it or heave it wildly away. The game closed without a further score. Catholic U. 37, Loyola 34.

Catholic Dental Students To Make Retreats At
Manresa As Unit

Father Ferdinand H. Schoberg, S. J., '17, assistant director at Manresa, with the approbation of Archbishop Curley, was chosen chaplain of the University of Maryland Catholic Dental Student's Club which was formally organized at a meeting at the Alcazar on Sunday, January 17, following a Communion Mass in the Chapel of Grace, Saint Ignatius' Church which was attended by six graduate dentists and ninety dental students of the University.

To Dr. William Day goes the chief credit for the idea of holding a Communion Mass and Breakfast for the students. Dr. Day was toastmaster at the breakfast and introduced among other speakers, the following graduate dentists: Drs. E. Mallory O'Brien, James H. Ferguson, Joseph D. Fusco, J. D. Cross and Emil V. Boche.

Dr. Frank J. Kirby, a Loyola graduate of '03, who was the principal speaker, spoke of the need of Catholic lay leaders and of the wonderful inspiration for such leadership and the solid spirituality which comes from a retreat at Manresa.

The Rev. Eugene deL. McDonnell, S. J., ex '85, and Father Schoberg also spoke, making a plea for that Catholic success in life that comes chiefly from within.

A letter from Dr. J. Ben Robinson, Dean of the University of Maryland Dental School, was read at the breakfast. Dr. Robinson commended the Manresa movement in caring for the spiritual development of the students.

The members of the Club will make a retreat at Manresa, in conjunction with the Georgetown University Dental Students during the week-end of April 22.

Father Herzog has been asked to become Moderator of this Society and the members are only awaiting the approval of Father McCormick, Rector of Woodstock to begin active work.

The Society will meet every second Tuesday. At these meetings lectures will be given by the Moderator and papers on various religious discussions will be read by the members.

CATULLUS' AND VARRO'S SCHOLARSHIP DISCUSSED

TOPICS OF LATIN CIRCLE

Joseph Feeney, who spoke on "The Lyric Richness of Catullus", and Andrew Hohman, who spoke on "Roman Scholarship as Typified in Varro", delivered the first lectures of the new semester in the Freshman Latin Classical Circle, on Friday, February 5.

Gaius Valerius Catullus, according to the lecturer, was born in Verona in 84 B. C. This great Latin poet, coming as he did from a wealthy family, enjoyed, in the glittering society of Rome, a life of luxurious pleasure which is constantly revealed in his writings, as is his love for Clodia, the fascinating wife of Metellus, governor of Gaul. His hopeless love for her, Catullus immortalizes in his poems about "Lesbia" which are filled with a great wealth of passionate yearning and rich lyrical expressions. However, when he came to know of her numerous infidelities, his theme changed from one of love to one of mistrust, disillusion and, finally, hatred.

The decadent poetry in the age of Caesar makes more prominent the daring of Catullus when he breaks away from its influence. To these closing years in Rome, belong his attacks on Caesar. In politics, he was swayed rather by his likes and dislikes than by principles, and he attacked Caesar in many of his writings, but eventually apologized and was forgiven.

Catullus wrote one hundred and sixteen poems, which reveal him as a writer with a heart of fire. Here are poems possessed of brevity—the brevity of passionate youth; they are vital with the glow of love or indignation. Most of these are short, where a moment's feeling is eternal in its intensity.

No doubt Catullus' place is among the great lyric poets of the world. It has been said that he is "the third next to Sappho and Shelley". He was the lighthouse which pointed out the way to a more exact prosody and a richer versification; he was indeed, "The tenderest of Roman poets".

Mr. Hohman, in his lecture on the scholarship of Varro, stated that this prolific writer was born at Reate in the Sabine country in 116 B. C. He, like Catullus, belonged to the upper class at Rome. He put the finishing touches to a fine education at Athens under the tutelage of the philosopher, Antiochus. Learning, however, did not make Varro a hermit, for he was actively engaged in politics in the Roman capital for some time.

As a scholar, Varro penetrated into almost every realm of learning. It is said that by the end of his seventy-eighth year, he had written seven hebdomads of books. The grand total of Varro's life work has been estimated by Retsch, as (Continued on Page 8, Column 3)

New Questionnaire

Six years ago, in an effort to get a complete and accurate list of all those who had at any time attended Loyola, a questionnaire was sent out to all the graduates and under-graduates from 1925 back, requesting date of birth, year of graduation from the college, business position and other details of interest to Alumni. A large number of replies was received and published in a booklet entitled, Echoes from the "Questionnaire" which was sent out to members of the Association.

At that time the Rev. Joseph A. McEneaney, S. J., was Honorary President, ex-officio; the Rev. Joseph I. Ziegler, S. J., was the Moderator and Clarke J. Fitzpatrick, '99, was President. Even then, the "Questionnaire" was not entirely complete, and naturally, since that time there have been many changes due to deaths, changes in residence and business position. Besides, none of the Alumni after 1925 are listed.

In order to be efficient and beneficial the Association should be in constant contact with its members. A new "Questionnaire" would be the means of doing this and it is felt that a new issue of this highly useful little book is now in order. Mr. Mark O. Shriver, President of the Association, is in favor of this and it is hoped that another "Questionnaire" will soon be forthcoming.

A striking example of the inaccuracy of the present edition of the directory is shown by an erratum in the last issue of the GREYHOUND: the year of Mr. Leo Codd's graduation was stated as 1896. This information, like most of the names and dates pertaining to Loyola graduates which appear in the Alumni Column of the GREYHOUND, was taken from this source. Mr. Codd himself noted the mistake, and in a letter to the GREYHOUND, claimed that as he had been born in 1895 and, according to the Alumni Notes, graduated in '96, he had established the all-time record since he defended the thesis on the analogy of ens at one year of age! The GREYHOUND regrets the error.

seventy-four different works comprising six hundred and twenty single volumes. Varro has written on the liberal arts, grammar, logic, rhetoric, geometry, music, medicine and architecture. His style, however, is not to be compared with the easy, flowing style of Cicero. His philosophy was not transcendently great; it was rather shrewd than profound.

For his all-around services to literature, no better summary can be given than Cicero's polished eulogy. Discerning that Greek scholarship and science had left Varro in spirit a Roman of the Romans,

Cicero prefaces a concise review of his achievements with this fine testimony: "When we felt ourselves foreigners and wanderers — strangers as it were, in our own Rome, your books may be said to have conducted us home, and enabled us at length to perceive who we Romans were and where we lived."
